A BALLOON CATASTROPHE.

THERE is every reason to fear that Mr. Walter Powell, M.P., was carried out to sea in a balloon in the neighbourhood of Bridport on Saturday (Dec. 10.) has perished in the English Channel. The accident is fully detailed in the letter which we publish below by Capt. Templer who, with Mr. Gardner, son of the late member for Cheltenham, accompanied Mr. Powell in his fatal ascent. The balloon, which was named the Saladin, was the property of the War Office, but about six months ago it was lent by the Government to the Meteorological Society, whom Captain Templer and his associates made their ascent at Bath on Saturday. On leaving Bath the balloon was carried over Somerset to Exeter, thence into Dorset. Near Bridport the aeronauts attempted to descend. The balloon struck the ground with great violence, and Captain Templer was thrown out. This caused the balloon to rise, and as it did so Mr. Gardner fell out at a hight of about eight feet breaking his leg. Mr. Powell remained in the car, and was then rapidly borne out to sea in a south easterly direction. When last seen he was waving his hand to Captain Templer. It is not known at present how far the balloon was carried, but as nothing has been heard of it from the Channel islands or from France, it is feared that it has been lost in the sea. On Sunday and Monday the steam-tug Commodore and various craft cruised about in the Channel in search of the balloon, but saw nothing of it.

The Meteorological Society's experimental trips with the Saladin have been made from various parts of the country under the direction of Captain Templer. This gentleman's last ascent from the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, was made a few months back in the presence of the King of the Sandwich Islands. Mr. Powell, M.P., who was frequently Captain Templer's companion, was noted for his fearlessness and enthusiasm in the art and practice of ballooning. Mr. Wright, an old practitioner, who has made at the Crystal Palace alone more than 200 ascents, has been acting as professional assistant to the Military Balloon Committee, and to him Mr. Powell has several times expressed a fixed determination to cross the Atlantic in a balloon to America, stating that neither the dimensions of the balloon, the cost, nor the danger should deter him from the attempt. New balloon, having been constructed by the committee at the Royal Arsenal about three years since, and it is the largest the War Department has, its cubical contents being 38,000ft. The Saladin is regarded as a new balloon, having been constructed by the Committee at the Royal Arsenal about three year since, and it is the largest the War Department has possessed, its cubical contents being thirty-eight thousand feet. It is not composed of silk, as the fashion was, but of strong calico, dressed inside and out with oil and colouring matter which rendered it quite impervious to air and moisture. Inflated with hydrogen gas, it has lifted as much as 70lb. per 1,000 cubic-feet, and with coal gas 40lb. per 1,000. Such an envelope, in good condition, and only half full of common gas, would be capable of supporting the weight of the car and one man for several days. Captain Templer, who is the senior captain of the 7th Battalion King's Royal Rifle Corps, formerly the 2d Middlesex Militia, was attached to the Balloon Committee on account of his practical knowledge of ballooning and the skill he had displayed in taking advantage of varying wind currents to sail in specified directions. Its great unweildiness, due to its enormous capacity, has rendered it unusually liable to accidents of all kinds. It was between 60ft. and 70ft. high, and 30ft. in diameter. The name Saladin was painted both on the envelope and car.

All the inquiries of the Foreign Office, the Meteorological Department, and Scotland-yard authorities as to the missing balloon have so far been fruitless. Captain Templer and some of Mr. Powell's friends proceeded some distance along the coast on Wednesday from Bridport in a steamtug to inform fishermen and others of the offer of £200 for the recovery of Mr. Powell, alive or dead. Dragging operations were then resumed until interrupted by threatening weather and a heavy sea. It is intended, so long as the sea continues rough, to engage men to keep a constant watch for anything coming to the surface. It is stated that Mr. Powell once previously had a somewhat perilous adventure on the south coast and was in danger of being carried out to sea. When the balloon came near Dover the country people made haste to secure it, and, not knowing how to act, gashed it with knives to let the gas out. The rents so caused are still visible on the balloon, which was quite new, and had been made of best Lyons silk under Mr. Powell's own direction.

The Channel Islands mail steamers which arrived at Jersey on Wednesday report not having seen or heard anything of Mr. Powell and the missing balloon. By order of Major-General Nicholson, Lieutenant-Governor of Jersey, a strict look-out is kept at all points of the island, and any intelligence will be sent direct to St. Heliers. His Excellency has received instructions from the Admiralty to send out Her Majesty's gunboat Dasher to cruise round Jersey for the same object.

Captain Templer believes that Mr. Powell had a fair chance of getting across the Channel safely. In the car of the balloon were many pounds of ballast—nearly 3cwt. in fact—and Mr. Powell would be able on liberating this to rise sufficiently high to clear the water : or he might have climbed up into the rigging of the balloon and cut the whole car adrift, with a view to ascending and getting across safely. There was a place in the rigging of the Saladin in which Mr. Powell might thus have sat safely, supposing always that he did not eventually become numbed with the cold and fall out from exhaustion. Throwing the car away bodily would give the balloon such a gain of strength that the aeronaut might fairly hope to travel for five or six hours—the time required to cross the Channel. Captain Templer fancies that if anything did fall, as some one imagined, near the cliff, it must have been the car thus cut adrift ; but, as the minutest search has failed to reveal this wicker work and therefore, buoyant "carriage," nothing can be said definitely on that point.

A fortnight ago Mr. Powell attended an agricultural dinner at Chippenham, when the toast of his health was proposed. In responding he referred to his balloon expeditions, expressing an opinion that going up in a balloon was not more dangerous than fox-hunting. The following private telegram has been received at Chippenham :—"London Dec. 13, 5 30 p. m.—Large reward for Mr. Powell. All foreign Governments and our Consuls informed, and they are using every exertion. No trouble or energy being spared here."

Mr. Robert H. Scott, Secretary, writing from the Meteorological Office on Monday, asks us to insert the following letter :—

"Sir,—I regret to report that on Saturday, the 10th of December, I ascended at Bath, accompanied by Mr. Walter Powell and Mr. Agg Gardner, at 1-55 p.m., for the purpose of taking the temperature of the air, and the amount of snow in the air, for the Meteorological Office. I cleared the snow clouds at 4,000ft. altitude ; the temperature of these clouds was 28deg., and the wet-bulb thermometer read 26deg. At 4,200ft. we passed over Wells, the time being 2h. 50m. At this height I worked over Glastonbury ; the temperature now rose to 41deg., and the sky was perfectly clear. I passed then between Somerton and Langport, and I here found that I was in a N. ½ W current. I asked Mr. Powell to send the balloon up to 6,000ft. to ascertain the temperature of a small bank of cirrus. I found this temperature to be 31deg., and then I asked him to place me at 2,000ft. altitude, to regain the N. ½ W. current, and we then came in view of Crewkerne. I now kept at a low altitude until I reached Beaminster. Mr. Powell here observed that we were going at 30 miles an hour, and here we first heard the roar of the sea. The balloon suddenly rose to 4,000ft. ; at this time I said to Mr. Powell 'Go down to within 100ft. of the earth and ascertain our exact position.' We coasted along close to the ground until we reached Symondsbury. I here called to a man and asked him how far the distance was to Bridport, and he said about a mile. I asked Mr. Powell to prepare to 'take in,' our pace now increasing to 35 miles an hour. To avoid the little village of Neape, Mr. Powell threw out some ballast. This took us to 1,500ft. elevation, and we had still two miles to get in. I opened the valve and descended about 150 yards short of the cliff. The balloon, on touching the ground, dragged a few feet, and I rolled out of the car with the valve line in my hand. This caused the balloon to ascend about 8ft., when Mr. Gardner dropped off and unfortunately broke his leg. I found that the rope was being pulled through my hands, and I called to Mr Powell, who was standing in the car, to come down the line. He took hold of the line, and in a few more seconds the line was torn through my hands. The balloon rose rapidly. Mr. Powell waved his hands to me and I took his compass bearings, and found that he was going in a S. ½ E. direction. Some men coming up, I placed Mr. Gardner in their charge, and sent word to the Coastguard and Bridport Harbourmaster to keep a good look out and to go out with boats. I then proceeded to Bridport and telegraphed to the Commanding Officer of Royal Engineers, Weymouth, to have a steamer in readiness for me to go in search. I proceeded to Weymouth and found the steamship Commodore with steam up. I here received a telegram from the Bridport Harbourmaster, saying that the balloon had been seen to drop in the sea south of Bridport. I at once proceeded to sea, and searched the alleged place of his descent, making due allowance for the wind and current. This proving unsuccessful, I crossed the Channel till we sighted the Casquets Light, and then returned in a N. W. direction, ultimately reaching Weymouth about 5 a. m. on Sunday morning and have organized further search. I am of opinion that what was seen to fall into the sea was not the balloon, but part of the gear, thrown out to lighten the balloon, as the balloon could not have fallen so close to the shore as to be visible about 5 p. m.—I have the honour to be your obedient servant,

"To Mr. R. H. Scott, F.R.S., Secretary, Meteorological Office."—Times.

THE Standard publishes the following letter, addressed to the Editor :—

SIR,—I am not at all surprised that incorrect statements should have been blended with the accounts respecting the missing Balloon, as well as about the antecedent experiences of Mr. Walter Powell, who made his first Balloon ascent in England with me, and has kept up a correspondence on aeronautic matters which qualifies me to write with authority. It was only last week, on the strength of a recent communication from Mr. Powell, that I found it expedient to correct an error purporting to be a trustworthy story as to the new silk balloon having been to Ireland and back to Essex. Mr. Powell wrote to me on Nov. 30, and emphatically denied that he had crossed the Irish Channel ; it was simply the Bristol Channel, or in reality the Severn, that had been traversed. The newspaper paragraph, he said, was "wholly incorrect," and he added these words—"When I make a remarkable trip I shall be pleased to write and tell you all about it."

His ascent with me from the Gasworks at Ashford, near the Folkestone, was in this wise. I had two Balloons in that locality, and intended to use the larger one for the purpose of crossing the English Channel by myself. Mr. Powell just then became acquainted with me, and begged to be allowed to join in the expedition. The month of November came on last year without a suitable wind continuing, but as it fell due east I offered to run him on November 2, not very far from the Land's End, a pledge which delighted him vastly, and in order to interest him in the resources of aerotation I gave it out before starting that we should go very near to Exeter, a prophecy the fulfilment of which he jocosely doubted during our career at high elevations, although I assured him it was based not on guess or fancy, but from having studied the map and experimented with pilot Balloons as to the upper and lower aerial drift, by which I was enabled to form my opinion as to our probable course.

Elated at the success of this, the longest trip ever made in Britain, which lasted nine hours and a half, pleased also with the accuracy of the looked-for pilotage and of the direction as to the descent, Mr. Powell subsequently proposed to embark with me in other experiments, and one of my small Balloons was to be used at Malmesbury ; but just before the day fixed for the ascent, while preparing for the work on my manufacturing premises at Seaford, in Sussex, I took a severe cold, and recommended that he should apply to Mr. T. Wright, who went down with his balloon, "Eclipse," and the ascent was made, as were others afterwards, with the same balloonist. I should not omit to state that in our voyage to Crediton we landed at night ; not, however, without knowing very inch, so to speak, of the ground we were passing over. My plan was to speak the earth frequently during darkness and fog, so as to trace our line from town to town as the land was narrowing down and the sea not so very remote. During this initiatory experience I never had a companion who so thoroughly enjoyed himself, and who appeared to appreciate the beauties of the scenery, and who promised, moreover, to be a spirited patron of the aeronautic art. Mr. Powell's personal attention to me after our landing, when I was fatigued, was of the most friendly and kind character. I can also speak highly of his quiet and undemonstrative courage, but this is established by his last heroic wave of the hand, and his declining to quit the car, though the sea and perils above might have daunted him before he struck for the sea alone, and, alas, without an instrument which I had shown him the use of at Ashford. This was an inverted cone of canvas, fixed to a hoop and weighted so as to anchor on the water.

It was with extreme regret I recommended Mr. Powell to pass into other hands. He was rather too enterprising and fresh for an aeronaut at my time of life, although, from his superabundant pluck, he needed a steady and cautious friend, for his was a type of chivalry which wanted checking if possible. It was only just before the misadventure that he wrote to me respecting the loan of one of my large Balloons to ascend with to a great elevation. I hold, among many others, a letter of his dated a few months previously, when he wanted a Balloon to ascend with seven miles high alone. I am only too glad that I discountenanced this project, and begged of him to re-read the particulars of the fatal attempt in Paris ; and I candidly told him that skill, judgment, and a certain amount of acclimatising were indispensable for that kind of work. However, his bent and ultimate intention were, I believe, in that direction ; and I make no doubt that he would have applied to me again, or entrusted himself to some better Mentor.

However, what we now have to deplore is that the important points I had instructed him in were not reproduced during the trip to Bridport. Had that cone I allude to, or another like it, been attached to the car, the "Saladin" might have been brought up not far from the shore. I have been in telegraphic communication with parties at Bridport, and have tendered my services to render any assistance, also have just been explaining to some friends how two or three Balloon nets would, if united and weighted with grapnels, enable a large space of the Channel to be trawled or dragged with a view of recovering the Balloon. Probably more effectual plans are held in high esteem, and my suggestions might be regarded as of little use if pressed. It is not for me at the present moment to offer any remarks as to the aim and objects prompting to the late unfortunate ascent. I myself might consider, and very likely be prejudiced, that a military Balloon should be used and reserved for war purposes, and for reconnoitring ascents, with the addition of my system of "Balloon signalling," introduced at the Crystal Palace for the first time, by-the-bye, in the presence of Mr. Powell and Captain Templer, who were at my right hand. I certainly think that war Balloons should try their evolutions nearer, if possible, to the seats of war, and further from the cliffs of our sea-girt island.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

HENRY COXWELL.

Seaford, Dec. 14.

THE Evening Standard of Dec. 16 says the members of the Balloon Committee at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, retain scarcely a vestige of hope that Mr. Powell is alive, and it is doubted whether any trace of him or the balloon will ever be discovered. Entertaining as most feasible the hypothesis of the balloon having exhausted its gas, and fallen into the sea soon after breaking away from the land, the officials conclude that there would not have been sufficient buoyancy remaining in the calico envelope or the wicker car to support a man's weight in the water for long ; and it is thought improbable that any part of the aerial machine itself would have floated for many hours, the agregate weight of cordage, calico, car, and equipment exceeding 600lb.

ON Friday afternoon (December 16) a meeting of the council of the Balloon Society of Great Britain was held at the offices, No. 26, Budge-row, Cannon-street, when several aeronauts attended. The chair was occupied by the President of the Society, Mr. V. H. Le Fevre, C.E., who, in opening the proceedings, said :—I very much regret to state that no news has yet been received announcing the recovery of the Saladin or its gallant occupant. From an early hour this morning I have been in attendance at the Admiralty and the Foreign Offices, but no further information has been received there relative to the balloon said to have been sighted off Cherbourg, and which I have no doubt was the Saladin. But I shall entertain hopes that it may yet be recovered, and sincerely hope (as we all do) that my expectations may shortly be verified. I have this morning received a communication from the President de la Société d'Aérostation Météorologique at Paris, M. De Fonvielle (who, it may be remembered, made a perilous descent in the south of England a few months ago) on the subject of the accident to Mr. Powell, M.P. M. De Fonvielle expresses great sympathy with the relatives of the missing gentleman, which emotion, he states, is felt by all his fellow-aeronauts in Paris, and informs me that their society is making every possible search for the missing balloon at their various stations throught France, and concludes by saying—"I do not give up hopes of the Saladin being recovered, with its occupant, and I base my confidence on my personal knowledge of Mr. Powell, who was remarkable for his courage, and self-possession." M. Le Fevre went on to say that he had a few minutes previously received another telegram from Jersey, saying that the greatest excitement was prevalent there in consequence of the belief being felt that Mr. Powell—dead or alive—would be sure to be found along the coast. Her Majesty's ship Dasher was still out in search, and private crafts had engaged in the search with the hope of obtaining the reward. He would telegraph back that renewed search ought to be made around Alderney (hear, hear).—Before the close of the meeting it was suggested that some notion of the fate of the Saladin might be arrived at if some adventurous aeronaut were to start in a balloon from the spot where Mr. Powell disappeared, and having ascended with the same wind and the same amount of gas, ascertain where it would ultimately drop. The suggestion was not taken up.

THE TERRIBLE DISASTER AT VIENNA.

THE FUNERAL.

VIENNA, Dec. 12.

VIENNA has buried its dead to-day. The invitation to the funeral on black-bordered mourning paper said that the Common Council of the town of Vienna fulfils the sad duty of notifying that the burial of those who perished by the burning of the Ring Theatre on the 9th inst. and whose burial could not take place by their relatives would take place on Monday, the 12th inst., in the forenoon, at the Central Cemetery. On the same day, at 9 a. m, a solemn requiem mass would be solemnized, and those invited were to go to the Central Cemetry, where, at 11 a. m., the funeral service would be read and the burial take place. The invitations had been sent to the members of the Reicharath, to the Ministries, and all other public offices to the different corporate bodies and associations, as well as to the Military and to many others, and the invitation was responded to by high and low. The church of St. Stephen has never before, perhaps, presented such an imposing spectacle as it did this morning. The altar was hung with black cloth surmounted with a large white cross and so were the choir stalls. In the centre of the church a catafalque had been erected blazing with lights. Long before the ceremony began the church was filled by those who could gain access, while a large crowd assembled outside. It was a quiet and silent crowd. No attempt was made to press forward, so that the row of policemen who had to keep free the passages had little cause to interfere. It was known that the Crown Prince, who arrived here yesterday, would be present, and the town dignitaries, Ministers, generals, and many officers, as well as the Statthalter, met to receive him, while the Archbishop, with the clergy came likewise to offer their allegiance. The crown Prince on arriving at the church, followed by all the Archdukes present in Vienna and the rest of the cortegé, went up the nave, which had been kept clear to the choir, and took up his place before the high altar. No one could fail to be impressed by the solemnity in any case, and many, including the Crown Prince, who had come as mere spectators, were visibly affected. When the ceremony was over, and when the Royal visitors had left the church, the members of the Corporation and the Town Council entered the mourning carriages that were in waiting for them, and, followed by a number of other carriages, went to the cemetry where the actual funeral ceremony was to take place. All along the way through the town crowds had assembled. They were, however, nothing to the thousands who had assembled in the cemetry to which from the early morning tramways, omnibuses, and other carriages had taken crowds. From all sides the crowd hastened to the arcades, in front of which the ceremony was to take place. Places had been reserved by a force of police and the military for those invited. Under the arcades the coffins, 125 in number, had been placed on a dais covered with black cloth, every one of them with a wreath upon it. In the centre before the arcades a grand catafalque had been erected ornamented with flowers and wreaths, but without any confessional emblems, as the dead belonged to various sects. Above the catafalque a large black and silver bordered tent was raised, and on a large tribune, covered with black cloth, were displayed the numerous wreaths of flowers that had been sent from all sides. Behind this catafalque on one side stood the relatives and friends of those who had perished in the terrible fire, while on the other side were assembled all the authorities of the town of Vienna. The funeral service was performed by several clergymen, each in his turn representing the creed to which the deceased belonged. When this was over the Burgomaster delivered a short oration, and the coffins were carried in batches to the graves prepared for them. Only those were buried to-day whose bodies had been recognized; the others will be buried to-morrow.

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST THE POLICE.

A question has arisen whether and how far it was possible to go to the rescue sooner; and this is a point strongly and even fiercely contested. The Minister-President himself admitted in the House that fearful omissions had been made. The shortcomings of the police, both in ascertaining that all the measures prescribed had really been taken and in doing their duty in the emergency itself, have been the daily theme of the severest comments on the part of the Liberal Press. As the inspection of the theatres is made jointly by the police and the Building Department of the town, a full and impartial inquiry can alone show whether there has been culpable neglect. The charges mainly refer to the conduct of the police on the evening of the catastrophe, and more especially to their not having done all that was possible to save life. As may be remembered from the first account, since confirmed by the official statement, directly after the arrival of the police and fire brigades an attempt was made to penetrate into the house, and on the left side of the pit some persons, whose calls had been heard has were rescued. As the smoke, however, prevented any further advance, as no more cries for aid were heard from above, as a considerable number of people had been seen escaping through the principal entrance, as the people who had been at the windows were being rescued, and as most of those belonging to the theatre were ascertained to have found their way out by the backdoor, it was assumed that all were saved, and this supposition was so strong that the first intelligence spread through the town was to this effect, and quite half an hour passed before, the smoke having diminished, a second attempt was made, which led to the discovery of a mass of human remains.

Since then a number of accounts by people who were saved have been published by the papers. Most of them, through highly sensational, describe various episodes more or less alike, and evidently dictated under strong excitement, and throw little light on the question. On Sunday last the Neue Wiener Tagblatt published the account of a young lady who lost her father, mother, and sister. The bridegroom of the latter was also burnt, and she herself was only saved by leaping down from a window into some cloths beneath. After telling how she had been separated from her relatives, she relates that she remembered nothing until she found herself in the buffet, where she found a gentleman. They tried to open the window, but could not do so. The gentleman took off his boot and broke. Having then borrowed some matches from the gentleman the young lady said she tried to go back. The matches would not burn, but she went on until she found a heap of human beings. She called out, but received no answer. She went back in the dark to the buffet, where there were more gentlemen by this time. She called at the window for help and lights, as hundreds were still being suffocated. The crowd below, he police, and the firemen shouted that all were saved. She called back that such was not the case, but only received a reply that she need not cry out, as there was no danger and as the ladder would be there immediately. Without waiting she again essayed to reach her parents. Her matches, however, would not burn, and she was forced to return to the buffet. By this time the fire brigade had arrived, and without hesitation she jumped from the window to the cloths spread beneath. She at once asked for lights, but all that was done was to take down her name and address. This account, which appeared in the first excitement of the hour, caused a great sensation, the more especially as the lady's father was employed in the firm of Dr. Skene, a member of Parliament, in whose house she had found refuge. I order to clear up the matter a commissary of police took her depositions. According to the account given also by the Wiener Tagblatt of this examination, the commissary at first tried to intimidate her by recommending her to tell the trtuh. She was reassured by the master of the house, and the commissary began to question her. The questions were objected to by Dr. Skene, and the young lady was asked to give her account. She said that she had called out repeatedly for lights and help to the people, and had gone back repeatedly with the matches. The commissary asked whether the firemen had heard what she said, but this, of course, she could not say. He then asked how the account came to the Wiener Tagblatt. The explanation given by Dr. Skene was that the reporter had come with his permission, and that he had asked the lady to state her case. The reporter, seeing the state of the young lady, was very discreet, addressed no questions to her, in order not to irritate her, took no notes, and after hearing her, left after a few minutes. Although this is an exparte statement of the case, it seems to clear up two points—viz., that the account was written from memory, and that the lady was in a highly excited state, and this must be the case with more than one of the other accounts which have been published and which have a certain likeness. It will be, of course, the duty of the Cort of Inquiry, which has already commenced its work, to seek and weigh the evidence on both sides, and to establish its real value.—Times.

THE STATE OF IRELAND.

About 10 o'clock on Tuesday night a tenant farmer, named Brennan, residing at Ballyfarnon, about eight miles from Carrick-on-Shannon, was shot. A party of men surrounded the house, called him outside, and then shot him. Brennan had been previously Boycotted for haviug applied to the Land Court. It is supposed that he had privately paid his rent, and this is assigned as a reason for the crime.

Mr. James Arthur, solicitor, was arrested at Carey on Monday under the Coercion Act, under a warrant charging him with inciting others to pay no rent. Mr. James Dowling, the manager of Mr. Cassidy's brewery in Kildare; Mr. Terence Byrne, millowner, Kildare; and Mr. Somers, of Kildare, were also arrested under the Protection Act, on warrants charging them with intimidation.

Michael Horgan, the only farmer on the Coachford property of Mrs. Coppinger, of Dublin, who expressed his intention of paying his rent, was visited on Saturday night by Captain Moonlight and 100 followers, who wrecked his house, and before leaving posted the following notice on his door: "Pay no rent until Parnell and the other suspects are released, or, by God, you will suffer."

Matthew Fagan, Corbally, near Fore, Westmeath, was fired at on Monday night at seven o'clock, and wounded by a bullet in the arm.

At Ballylanders, county Limerick, an Monday, the constable in charge of the police on the occasion of the recent rioting was accused of not having taken sufficient measures to quell the disturbance, and the authorities being determined to make an example of him, reduced him to the grade of subconstable, and have sent him for duty in Limerick, He would have been dismissed altogether but for his length of service.

In view of the arrest of so many members of its staff, and the belief that the Government intend to continue those arrests, the Land League organ, United Ireland, is henceforth to be conducted by a staff of ladies, and the lady editor, Miss Lynch, accordingly took charge of the office on Monday.

On Tuesday, at the Munster winter assizes, Judge Fitzgerald sentenced Patrick Oronin to 10 years' and his six companions to five years penal servitude each for having, at Graham, North Kerry, during last month, entered the mountain cabin of Bridget Lenaire and committed a series of outrages, among others, dangerously wounding with a bullet a little child as she lay in bed in her mother's arms. The judge said it was the poor in their desolate cabins, who were subject to this tyranny, and the Government was determined upon making the country safe for the humblest person.

At the assizes at Carrick-on-Shannon on Monday, Catherine Lavelle was charged with the murder of her husband, who resided near Castlebar, county Mayo. Thomas and Mary Lavelle were also charged with the murder of the deceased, who was their father. It appeared from the evidence that, some family dispute having arisen, the deceased was attacked by the prisoners, who inflicted over 50 wounds on his body. The prisoners were found guilty of "Manslaughter," after half an hour's deliberation. Catherine Lavelle was sentenced to penal servitude for life, and Mary and Thomas Levelle to 10 years.

An occurrence of an extraordinary nature has taken place at Dromeskin, near Castle Bellingham. The Rev. P. M'Cullagh, P. P., from the altar steps, a week ago advised Lord Clermont's tenants, who resided in that parish, to pay their rents, and not he misled by a few rebels. A number of people then left the chapel. On Sunday last the rev. gentleman read out from the altar steps a list of those who had so offended, and called upon them to advance to the altar rails and make an apology, or leave the church. The congregation chose the last-mentioned course, and all left with the exception of a few men and some women. Subsequently the rev. gentlemen read the Gospel of the day, and delivered a sermon, in the course of which he denounced the Land League agitation in strong terms.

James Ennis, of Rhode, King's Country, and Gerald O'Toole, Tullow, county Carlow, were released from Naas gaol on Wednesday.—Lloyds Newspaper.

SIR GARNET WOLSELEY ON THE VOLUNTEER FORCE.

Lieutenant-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, with whom was Lady Wolseley, on Dec. 13th, presented the prizes gained during the year by the members of the London Irish Rifles (16th Middlessex), in St. James's Hall. Amongst others present were Lord and Lady Ashley, General Elkington, Colonel Fitzroy, Major Kane, Captatin and Mr. Campbell, Colonel Jerome, Colonel Ward, Captain and Acting Adjutant Lloyd, &c. Colonel Ward said the regiment was now 896 strong, and he was endeavouring to raise a twelfth company.

Sir Garnet Wolseley said he felt special pleasure in meeting the London Irish Volunteers, because he felt that he was surrounded by loyal Irishmen who were proud of the uniform which they wore, and who were staunch and true to her Majesty's service, and to the great interests of this Empire, of which Ireland was a component part. He believed there existed in Ireland a much larger section of loyal and staunch people than Ireland was given credit for. He believed that if the Volunteer force had not been called into existence we as a nation should have had to submit to conscription, and should have been compelled to maintain a very much larger standing army. This was a matter which should commend the Volunteers to every British taxpayer. The Army had done much to promote the welfare of the Volunteer force, and in a like manner the Volunteers had benefited the Army by making it more popular with the people. They had removed the stigma which attached to the name of the soldier, and men who formerly would never have thought of enlisting were now becoming soldiers. The were, however, some few men who were unpatriotic and ungenerous enough to draw an invidious distinction between the civilian and the soldier clad in her Majesty's uniform. From time to time he had seen accounts of persons in authority at places of entertainment refusing to admit the soldier. To counteract this "nefarious" rule he suggested that the Volunteers should refuse to enter those houses which the soldier was not permitted to enter. By this course they would add one more to the long list of benefits which the Volunteer service had already conferred upon the standing army.

THE ROBBERY OF LADY TREVOR'S JEWELS.

Two prisoners were again brought up, on remand, at Llangollen, on Dec. 14, charged with stealing Lady Trevor's jewels. The names of the accused are Amelia Gardiner, who was formerly head housemaid, and Arthur Head, who was valet to Lord Trevor. The Justices on the Bench were Captain Dickin (Chairman), Major Conran, and Mr. R. Myddelton Biddulph.

Mr. Marcus Louis, who appeared for the prosecution, drew attention to the fact that the examination was really a preliminary one, and urged that it should be held with closed doors, as it would be in the interests of the inquiry.

Mr. Llewellyn Adams and Mr. Roberts, who appeared respectively for Head and Gardiner, strongly opposed the application, and the Bench decided that the inquiry should be made in open court.

Mr. Louis then stated the case for the prosecution, reviewing the circumstances on the day of the robbery.

Lady Trevor said she had been possessed of a large quantity of jewels which she had not had occasion to use between November 16th and the 4th Dec. On Sunday morning, the 4th Dec., she went to church, and, returning a little before one, she was told by Gardiner that her dressing-room in which the jewels were kept was locked. It was then discovered that the jewels were missing. Later in the evening Gardiner was charged and pleaded innocence. She thought her maid was the only person in the house who knew where the jewels were kept. The casket containing the jewels was locked, and the key was kept by herself, but the key of the drawer which contained the casket was kept by her maid. Amongst the jewels stolen were an amethyst and diamond necklace, and all those mentioned in the advertisement which had appeared in the newspapers. She packed them in a box herself before leaving Hawkstone on the 16th November, and locked it. It was placed in the care of Head and Elizabeth Wigg, her maid. Witness only took out of it a diamond spray and hairpin. On the 4th of December, when she got to Brynkinalt, she saw the butler, and afterwards Gardiner and Head.

Lord Trevor said the accused, Head, was his valet, and in pursuance of his duty had to go into his rooms. On returning from church, before one o'clock, he was told that both his and Lady Trevor's dressing-rooms were locked, and he gave instructions to burst open the doors. Later on, he gave Head and Gardiner into custody, as they were left in charge of the house in the absence of the family. He valued the stolen jewels at between 30,000*l*. and 50,000*l*. In cross-examination he said he had a good character with Head, but not from his last employer.

Several Witnesses were heard, and as the hour for adjournment drew near, the Bench urged the Prosecution to bring forward evidence in support of the charge.

Mr. Louis said he had not had time to prepare the case, but pressed for a remand, which was reluctantly granted by the Bench, bail in 2,000*l*. being unprocurable.

EXTRAORDINARY MURDER CASE.

This afternoon (Dec. 16th) George Henry Lamson, who stands charged on suspicion of having caused the death of Percy Malcolm John by administering poison to him, was brought up on remand at Wandsworth Police-court, before Mr. Paget. The accused and deceased stand in the relationship of brothers-in-law, the former having married deceased's sister. The deceased, who was a lad of 19, of delicate health, being paralysed in his lower limbs, was at school at Dr. Bedbrook's Blenheim House, Wimbledon, an on Friday, December 3rd, the accused called to visit him, bringing as a present a cake, and some sweets, as well as a box of jujube capsules, an American invention for taking nauseous medicines, as a present for Dr. Bedbrook. Some powdered white sugar was brought in for him to illuustrate the use of these capsules, and some were swallowed by Dr. Bedbrook and by the Deceased himself, the latter also drinking a glass of sherry in which the accused apparently put so some sugar, to correct, as he said, its alcoholic strength.

Mr. St, John Wontner appeared for the prosecution; Mr. Montagn Williams and Mr. Gladstone for the prisoner.

Mr. Gladstone asked for an order to have the intestines of the deceased given up for analist. He said that application had been made to the Coroner, who had referred him to the Home Secretary, from whom no answer had been received. He asked the Magistrate whether he had any jurisdiction.

Magistrate said he must refer him to the Home Secretary.

Mr. Wontner said he should show that the prisoner was the brother-in-law of the deceased, who was entitled to 3500*l*., which, on his death, went to his sister. He should show that at the time of the occurrence, the prisoner was in want of money, and had pledged his watch and surgical instruments; and on the 2nd Dec., he went with Mr. Tulloch to the Eyre Arms, St. John's-wood, and was introduced to the proprietor, who cashed a cheque, which was returned marked, "No account," so that the Prisrner was so impecunious that it was necessary to commit a criminal offence to obtain funds. He arrived in London ten days before the 10th, and stayed at Nelson's Hotel, where he was unable to pay the bill, leaving behind two portmanteaux Mr. Harford, a clerk at an American agency, would show that Prisoner was trying to have drawn a cheque in the sameway, representing himself as the son of Dr. Lamson, which he asked Mr. Harford to cash, but was refused. On the Thursday he met Mr. W. Tulloch, and told him that he was going to Florence. They went to the Waterloo Station to see him off to Paris on the evening of the 2d. On arriving at Waterloo the Prisoner changed his mind and said it was necessary to see Percy at Wimbledon. Tulloch went with him and stayed till he came back, when Prisoner told Mr. Tulloch that Percy was getting worse with the curvature of the spine, and would soon die; but the whole story was untrue. His intention probably was to go to Paris and to see his brother-in-law on the Friday. He failed to get means, and put off the visit till the following day, when he presented a fraudulent cheque on the Wilts and Dorset Bank. He got funds, and was able to go to Wimbledon and to Paris; but the matter then got into the papers, and Mr. Trust communicated with the police, who went to Messrs. Sainsbury, the chemists, whose assistants have seen and identified the Prisoner, and they will say that about the 24th the Prisoner went to Hanbury's shop and said he was Dr. Lamson, of Bournemouth, and wanted two grains of aconita. He was sent to another counter, where the assistant weighed out two grains of aconita. Two persons being required to witness the sale, both assistants saw the poison weighed, and put in the packet, and the Prisoner took it away. The assistants having looked at the Medical Register, found Dr. Lamson described with all his qualification. There was reference, too, of some foreign qualifications—Pennsylvania, Paris, Vienna, and London; that he was surgeon major in the Russian service. The assistants looked at the Medical Directory and they noticed the qualifications, and thought he had seen considerable service. He was a surgeon throughout the American war, and also throughout the war between Turkey and Russia. The assistants thought there was no particular use preserving the name and address which the Prisoner had given them, because it had been verified by the Medical Register. Every attempt had been made to recover the paper in vain, but there was the evidence of the two assistants. When one had read the account of the inquest, he communicated with the other. At first they thought they had sold him a poison, which the Prisoner mentioned at the last examination—atrophine; but on referring, they found from the price given for it that it was aconita. The price paid was 2s. 6d. for two grains. They then communicated to Mr. Hanbury, who thought the matter of so much importance that he communicated with Mr. Flux, the solicitor, of Flux and Arnold, who are solicitors to the Society of Chemists, and then went to Scotland-yard, and we are now in a position to call these two assistants. Two witnesses, Henry Hay and William Amor, will tell you that on the Prisoner's bed-room mantelpiece there was a blue bottle with "Poison" upon it, which they packed for him on the night of December 3. The Prisoner, on leaving Dr. Bedbrook's house, went to the railway station, and asked a railway porter to lend him an envelope. He got one, put money in it, and told him to take it to Mr. Bedbrook's, and it turns out to be the letter and money which Mr. Bedbrook has referred to. On the Sunday after the death, information was given to Inspector Fuller by Mr. Bedbrook, who might be desirous to hush up what was a great scandal; but after eighteen hours he communicated with the police. Inspector Fuller then went to the house and received the capsules and the cake. Mr. Tulloch or his brother will show the reasons why the cake was in so rough a condition. It was bought by some one in consequence of a letter written to Mr. Nelson. The cake and sweets were taken to Mr. Nelson's lodgings where part of them were eaten. The cake, part of the sugar, and the capsules, were handed by him to Inspector Bircher, and by him to Mr. Du Pre, the analyst at Westminster Hospital, and they, with the stomach, were given to Dr. Stephenson for analysis. Mr. Bedbrook handed over an address label with New York upon it, which was upon the capsule box. The Prisoner told Mr. Bedbrook he had purchased something for him in New York. The label, however, shows that the jujubes were sent by post. On the matter being placed in the hands of the police they communicated with Mr. Harman, a merchant in the City, who is trustee under the will of Percy John's father. Mr. Chapman is a gentleman who married Prisoner's wife's sister. Inspector Butcher, communicating through him, heard of a person named Keskee, who keeps an hotel, or boarding-house, where the Prisoner has been in the habit of staying. A detective serjeant was sent over to make inquiries there, but in the meantime, for some reason, the Prisoner—either because he was innocent, or because he had exhausted all his money—came the next morning to Scotland-yard, and had some conversation with Inspector Butcher, who detained him, until he had communicated with Superintendent Williamson, and then told him he must be detained on a charge of causing the death of Percy John. He was then brought up at this Court. That was the outline of the evidence he proposed to adduce at present, the inquest, to suit the convenience of the Court, being postponed to the 20th.

Mr. Thos. Bond, F.R.C.S., was the first witness examined. He said in accordance with instructions—I went to Wimbledon on Tuesday, the 6th December. I made a post-mortem examination on the body of the Deceased, assisted by Dr. Berry and Dr. Little. The body was not at all decomposed. There were no marks of injury or violence. There was old-standing paralysis of the lower extremities with great deformity. There was also curvature of the spine of old standing. Apart from that the body appeared to be that of a perfectly healthy young man. The muscular development of the upper extremities was very marked. The surface of the body was pale. The pupils of the eyes were dilated. The nails on the feet and hands were livid, but there was no contraction of the hands. The mucous membrane of the mouth and lips was very pale, but not burned in any way. The surface of the tongue was rough and furred. I opened the skull cap and found the membranes of the brain somewhat congested. The brain itself was also slightly congested. There was no fluid in the ventricles of the brain nor under the membrane. On opening the chest, I found the apex of the right lung adhering of the wells of the chest, the result of old inflammation. There was general congestion of both lungs, and excessive congestion at the back of each lung. There was very little fluid in the cavity of the pleura.

The examination was proceeding when our report left.—Evening Standard.

THE MISSING ARCTIC EXPEDITIONS.

At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, on Dec. 12, papers were read upon recent Arctic exploration. Sir H. C. Rawlinson presided, and there was a large attendance, including Sir George Nares, and many other officers who have been engaged in Arctic exploration.

Mr. C. R. Markham referred to the discoveries which had been made in the Behring's Straits section of the Arctic regions in the course of the operations in search of the Jeannette, which was sent out from San Francisco on the 8th July, 1879, at the cost of 68,000*l*., by Mr. Gordon Bennett, though officered and manned from the United States Navy. She was last seen on September 3rd steering towards Wrangell Land, and there was a subsequent report that a steamer was seen off the mouth of the Siberian river Lena on the 13th. The vessel was provisioned for three years, and her Commander, Lieutenant de Long, was instructed to push north over the meridian of Wrangell Land, where, according to native reports, there is land never seen by civilised men. Two steamers, the Thomas Corwin and the Rodgers, left San Francisco this year in search of the Jeannette, but without success; but Wrangell Land was found to be an island, and explored by the Rodgers, which then pushed 116 miles due north without making further discoveries. The vessel will winter in St. Lawrence Bay this year, pushing sledge parties along the Siberian Coast to the north and west. Adverting to the sympathy felt in this country for the missing expedition, and to the duty imposed on us to reciprocate the active aid of our American kinsmen in the search for Sir John Franklin, the Council of the Royal Geographical Society suggest that a search should be made, through the instrumentality of the Hudson's Bay Company, of the coast which can be reached from the Mackenzie River, the Society defraying part of the expense. Admiral Sir Richard Collinson thinks the Jeannette never reached Wrangell Land, and that, being beset, she may have followed the track of our own ship the Enterprise in 1850, and be drifting slowly to the east, if not emerging opposite the Mackenzie River, that she may drift into Banks' Straits and through Lancaster Straits into Davis Straits like the Resolute. A third alternative is that she may be forced down M'Clintock Channel. In addition to the Hudson's Bay Company instructing the Eskimo that rewards would be given to them for assistance, our whalers should be instructed to keep a sharp look-out in Davis Straits.

A distinguished young Danish naval officer, Lieutenant Hovgaard, who made the north-east passage in the Neva with Baron Nordenskjold, was introduced to the meeting by the President to explain a project he has formed, on the assumption that the Jeannette has drifted to the westward, for pushing a search in that direction by utilising the north-east passage, and pushing in the direction of Cape Cheyluskin, searching all the coast while en route, going into winter quarters if necessary, and pushing explorations by dog sledges. This is contingent on the success of a visit he is about to pay to the United States to try and raise funds.

A paper by Commodore Jansen, of the Royal Dutch Navy, was read. It described the Dutch voyages which for years past have been annually pushed into the Barents Sea to try and obtain such data in regard to the ice as will enable them to establish a base for new Polar expeditions. This year's exploration shows that the south ice has extended nearly to the North Cape. The experience of Sir H. Gore Booth and Mr. Leigh Smith showed that Franz Josef Land, so far from being always so difficult of access as it was found by the Tegethoff expedition, could be reached through open water two years in succession, though, from meteorological conditions which were explained in the Paper, it is liable to be closed in with the ice. Commodore Jansen supposes that Mr. Leigh Smith, who has explored much of Franz Josef Land, and discovered a harbour named after his steamer, Eira Harbour, tried this last summer to reach it again, and finding it beset with ice, discovered an opening where he got in last year, and steaming up that got shut in. He may now be either in Eira Harbour, or, if beset in the ice like the Tegethoff was, be drifting towards an unknown region, so that the crew may have to find shelter in snow huts on the south coast of Franz Josef Land.

Admiral Sir George Nares, in the discussion which followed, after referring to the various positions of difficulty in which Mr. Leigh Smith may be at present placed, and to the claim on the nation which that gentleman has established by the able explorations he has conducted at his own expense, urged that it was a case for a national expedition being sent for his relief, if he did not escape in the course of next season.

Sir Allan Young, Sir H. Gore Booth, and Mr. Grant, an artist who has been in the Arctic Seas with Mr. Leigh Smith, and with the Dutch expeditions, referred to the Eira having only two years' provisions, and to her boats being too heavy to drag over ice. They all concurrred in the necessity of such a relief expedition being despatched.

Commander Hall, R. M., agreeing in this, suggested also that one of our Pacific Station ships should be sent to Behring's Straits next summer to aid in the Jeannette search.

The Chairman, in winding up the discussion, read a letter sent by the Royal Geographical Society, urging the Government to send an expedition to relieve Mr. Leigh Smith. A deputation would wait upon the First Lord of the Admiralty on the subject on Tuesday, the 20th Dec.

TRIAL OF GUITEAU.

Guiteau's trial continues amid the usual "scenes." The accused protested against the evidence that was given of the depravity of his habits and morals as irrelevant. Several witnesses who swore to his sanity, shrewdness, and bad conduct, were repeatedly contradicted by the prisoner, who was, it is stated, "unusually vicious, abusing the counsel on both sides." One witness said that Guiteau in 1874 told him he was bound to have notoriety one way or another, and "might kill some big man, like Wilkes Booth." Guiteau "fiercely pronounced this witness to be a liar." On Monday as the accused was furiously denouncing the press, one of the audience cried out, "Shoot him now!" A scene of great excitement followed, and it was some time before order was restored. Guiteau's conduct throughout the day was outrageous. On Wednesday, again, he is stated to have behaved in a very excited manner. He violently abused a witness who swore to his being dishonest and having committed a breach of trust, calling him "a liar and a miserable whelp." No restraint, it is stated, was placed on the prisoner, "who was allowed, on principle, to do as he pleased, in order that the jury might be able to judge of him by his conduct." President Arthur, in his written answers to Mr. Scoville's questions, declares that Guiteau has never conversed with him, except to exchange ordinary salutations, and once or twice touching the prisoner's request for employment during the Presidential campaign. It is stated that sixteen experts in insanity who have been summoned, some for the defence and some for the prosecution, have held a consultation, and discovered that they all agree he is sane and responsible for his actions. This, it is believed, will greatly shorten the trial, and secure a conviction. The warden of the gaol has received a warning to remove all prisoners from the wing where Guiteau is confined, as it is intended to blow it up with dynamite, but not to endanger other lives than Guiteau's.

Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil.—Palatableness and the facility with which it is digested are distinctive characteristics of Dr. de Jongh's Cod Liver Oil. Dr. Granville, F. R. S., author of "The Spas of Germany," writes "Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil does not cause the nausea and indigestion too often consequent on the administration of the Pale Oils. Being, moreover, much more palatable, Dr. Granville's patients have themselves expressed a preference for Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil." Sold only in capsuled Imperial half-pints, pints, and quarts, by all chemists, druggists and store-keepers. Sole Consignees, Ansar, Harford and Co., 77, Strand, London.

MR. O'DONOVAN'S LAST DAYS AT MERV.

Under the head of "Last Days at Merv" the Daily News publishes a letter from its especial correspondent giving details of the events which preceded his departure from Merv and the commencement of his journey to Constantinople, whence his communication is dated. Mr. O'Donovan describes the ceremony of his inauguration as one of the triumvirs of Merv, and a summary of his "historic harangue" to the council. On his urging an entire and immediate cessation of attacks on their neighbours if they wished to avoid the fate of the Akhal Tekke tribes, a member of the assembly, who had heard the proposal with angry astonishment, asked how in the name of Allah they were going to live if raids were not made on one side or the other.

This protest was made so energetically, and with such evident good faith, that it was with difficulty that I could retain my gravity as I replied that doubtless, in case of a Russian conquest, the people of Merv would find themselves under the necessity of living without raiding and that what was possible then was feasible now. I pointed out how Russia had extinguished the slave markets of Khiva and Bokhara, and how the occupation of Merv was thenceforth necessarily gone, and how from every point of view reform was not only expedient but necessary. . . . I tried to show that were the passage of caravans across the oasis from Samarkand, Bokhara, and Khiva guaranteed, the income to be derived from a small and legitimate impost on goods in transitu would far exceed the spasmodic and uncertain gains of "freebooty." I took a good deal of pains to show that the might of the invincible Frenghi was due to the adoption of principles like these, and I asked for at least a trial of the same ideas.

My principles were agreed to; but there was yet a question to sorely try the adhesion of the Merv to the new Constitution. There was a prisoner among the aladjaks since seven years. I made it a sine qua non that Gedaief, the once youthful artilleryman, should be set free, and I offered on my own part a thousand francs if they would accede to my proposition, and stipulated that he should be immediately freed from his irons. The latter request was fully accorded to me, but the release of the prisoner was refused on the ground of private interests.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

THE ORIGINAL and ONLY GENUINE.

ADVICE TO INVALIDS.—If you wish to obtain quiet, refreshing sleep, free from headache, relief from pain and anguish, to calm and assuage the weary achings of protracted disease, invigorate the nervous media, and regulate the circulating systems of the body, you will provide yourself with that marvellous remedy discovered by Dr. J. Collis Browne (late Army Medical Staff), to whica he gave the name of CHLORODYNE, and which is admitted by the profession to be the most wonderful and valuable remedy ever discovered.

CHLORODYNE is the best remedy known for Coughs, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma.

CHLORODYNE acts like a charm in Diarrhœa, and is the only specific in Cholera and Dysentry.

CHLORODYNE effectually cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Hysteria, Palpitation, and Spasms.

CHLORODYNE is the only palliative in Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, Meningitis, &c.

From Symes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Medical Hall, Simla, January 5, 1880, to J. T. Davenport, Esq., 33, Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, London. Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a DELIBERATE BREACH OF FAITH ON THE PART OF THE CHEMIST TO PRESCRIBER AND PATIENT ALIKE. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, Symes & Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was, undoubtedly, the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that the story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, which, he regretted to say, had been sworn to.—See "The Times," July 13, 1864.

Sold in bottles at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each. None is genuine without the words "Dr J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

CAUTION.—Beware of Piracy and Imitations.

COMMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE

FRIDAY EVENING, JAN. 6.

THE tight state of money has had a depressing effect on Government Paper, 4 per cent has receded to 100⅜ to ½, and 4½ to 109½ to ⅝, and there are very few buyers.

The Share Market, however, is steady on the whole, and Spinning Shares are again, in many instances, higher, there being a considerable disposition to consider these as good investment at the low rates now current.

Exchange opened strong and closes firm at a 1-32 advance on yesterday's quoted rates. The following are our detailed quotations.

	Tele-graph. Demand	3 months' sight.	4 months' sight.	6 months' sight.
Bank	1s. 1 1-16d.	1s. 8½d.	1s. 8 9-32d.	1s. 8¼d.
Credits			1s. 8 7-16d.
Documents			1s. 8 15-32d.	1s. 8 21-32d.
France		215½		217½

At these rates business can be done till the end of April, except for Bank Demand drafts, which can only be got at 1-8½ for the coming mail of the 12th proximo.

Cotton yesterday was reported "steady" in Liverpool, and sales 10,000 bales. No alteration was made in quoted rates, but Surats were reported "quiet." The market here remains practically unchanged. Sellers will not take less than our quoted rates of yesterday, but there is not much business doing, and we report on prices generally, as unchanged, but weak at quotations. There has been rather more enquiry to-day for good Omras.

The Manchester Market for Goods and Yarns is reported quiet but steady, but here we are very dull and stagnant.

Freights are steady. The steamer Cyphrenes, and Inchulva, whose charters were cancelled, have been refixed for Liverpool at 37-6 with concessions. Some relets have been effected by the Teviot, Inchmuree and Hankow, for London at 36-3 to 37-6.

There are no fresh charters to report.

The Bombay Gazette

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1882.

THE public are getting weary of the eternal Irish Question. Whether the Hon. E. P. Bouverie is right when he declares in a letter to the Times that "Ireland is in a state of siege and revolution, and society there seems rapidly approaching dissolution ;" or Mr. Chamberlain is correct when stating that outrages have fallen off 50 per cent., nobody now particularly cares to inquire. There is a general impression abroad that things could not well be worse, and that if the Government had acted in some undefined way differently from the beginning, they would undoubtedly have been better. "J. M. M." welcomes the prospect of private war which the action of the Lord Mayor of London opens up, for once it is on foot, the "abdication" of its proper functions by the Government will be patent and undeniable. Unfortunately, "private war," however well it may point a party moral, won't mend matters in the least. The truth seems to be that the Government is now, and has for some time past been, content to play in the Irish business, the not very dignified or successful rôle of the Beaconsfield Cabinet in regard to the Eastern Question. Everyone in the East perfectly well understood that Lord Beaconsfield had a defined and consistent policy of his own for dealing with Russian aggression in Eastern Europe, but that, instead of carrying it out in its integrity, he allowed himself to be influenced by the Radical agitation set on foot by Mr. Gladstone, and, practically, the policy which ultimately prevailed, was that of Mr. Gladstone, and not that of Lord Beaconsfield. Indeed, it may be said, that the "integrity of the Ottoman Empire" was more ruthlessly disregarded by the Beaconsfield Cabinet, than it would have been by Mr. Gladstone himself, who, assuredly would never have made Austria a present of Bosnia and the Herzegovina, and taken over Cyprus, had he been in power instead of his rival, in dealing with the Irish agitators the fête is reversed ; the Liberal in power has his policy shaped for him by the Conservatives in opposition, and the result is a general impression of incoherence, and of consequent failure in even the most sweeping measures of repression. Mr. Bouverie says that "the Executive in Ireland is now one of pure arbitrary power," but that "the state of siege has wholly failed to secure order, or peace, or property, or life, or limb." Cavour's declaration that "any one could rule with the state of siege" seems to be contradicted by this account of the actual condition of things in Ireland, even after making the necessary deduction for rhetorical exaggeration. The truth is, the "state of siege" is only effective in the hands of those who are known themselves to believe in it, and to be ready to go all lengths in its application. Had the Conservatives applied coercion, they would at least have had the support of the Conservatives in Ireland, and neither Conservatives nor Liberals would have doubted their thoroughness. Therein they would have had a great advantage over the semi-Radical Cabinet of Mr. Gladstone, which is resorting to an instrument of government that has been the object of much impassioned denunciation from every one of the present ministers. "Force is no remedy" is the declared conviction of the Right Hon. Mr. Bright, and his justification of coercion the other day at Birmingham is regarded by most people as only half-hearted at the best. And so with them all. It would have been much better had the Conservatives, who have really prescribed this policy, been permitted to enforce it, just as it would have been infinitely better for all concerned, had the Beaconsfield Cabinet made way for Mr. Gladstone when the latter's policy with regard to the Eastern Question superseded its own. A policy is never thoroughly effective, except when it is carried out by men who are whole-souled believers in it. The hesitations and doubts which paralyse those who are giving effect to a policy in which they only half believe, are sure to prove contagious, discouraging friends and encouraging enemies. That seems to us to be the state of the case with regard to the ministers and Ireland at the present time.

It is curious to note how closely the utterances of the Land Leaguers and the Conservatives coincide when speaking of the break-down of the Government policy. The Standard declares the movement set on foot by the Lord Mayor, to have for its object the "popular condemnation of the whole Irish policy of Mr. Gladstone's C

THE GOVERNOR OF MADRAS ON TOUR.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MADRAS, JAN. 6.

The Governor arrived at Ootacamund at five o'clock yesterday evening. The townspeople turned out in crowds to welcome him. His Excellency inspected the Guard of Honour formed of Volunteers. A municipal address was then read, which expressed pleasure that the Governor had interested himself in the welfare of the community. A report laid before Government had pointed out that the sanitation, drainage, and water supply of the station needed aid. The Commissioners hoped that Ootacamund would be made the seat of Government. His Excellency in reference to this matter said the inhabitants of Ootacamund had no fear of the Madras papers (Sic.) He hoped to see the Commissioners individually and talk over business matters.

SPEECH BY MR. GRANT DUFF.

The following is the Governor's reply to the Ootacamund Municipal address :—Gentlemen, I thank you for coming here to meet me with your extremely friendly address. You are quite right in supposing that my attention has been called to the very able and elaborate report of the committee to which you allude; in fact my only reason for coming hither just at present was a desire to satisfy myself on some matters discussed in that report. One learns a great deal from official papers, but some things are best learnt on the spot. I acted, accordingly, in the spirit of, what seemed to me, a happy remark made to me by the Maharajah of Cashmere when I was last in India. "Between the eye and ear," he said, "there may be only two or three finger's breadth, but there is a mighty difference between hearing and seeing." In the latter portion of your address you speak of a not far distant time when this place shall be the capital of the Madras presidency. You are putting forward a serious claim without having the fear of the Madras press before your eyes. It would surely be a thousand pities if any negligence on the part of man were to imperil the position for which nature has done so much. I take this opportunity of saying that I trust to be able during my period of office so to distribute my time amongst the various districts of the presidency, as not to afford ground for just criticism on the part of anyone. As for just criticism we all must make up our minds to meet plenty of that. It was a wise man who said that he who would escape censure, must procure for himself a chair out of this world's circle.

We are glad to notice that a considerable improvement has at last been effected at the Nesbit Road level crossing. Up to the end of the year one could never drive along Nesbit Road and be sure that the gates would not be closed and the passage blocked. One of the chief reasons for the continual closing of the gates was, that the railway line on either side was used for shunting operations in connection with the traffic to Boree and Waree Bunders; but from the first of the month this has been discontinued, a new set of shunting points having been opened between the crossing and Hancock Bridge. Now, the gates at the crossing are closed only for the ordinary trains to pass, and the street is blocked much less frequently, and only for a few seconds at a time.

The accounts relating to the trade and navigation of British India for the month of November 1881, and for the eight months, 1st April to 30th November 1881, show that the imports amounted to Rs. 5,50,25,266, and the exports to Rs. 6,48,68,687 in November last, as compared to Rs. 5,57,76,272 and Rs. 5,03,55,136 respectively in the corresponding month of 1880, and to Rs. 5,21,81, 180 and Rs. 4,73,67,500 in November 1879. For the eight months, 1st April to 30th November 1881, the total imports were Rs. 38,50,50,000 and the exports Rs. 49,01,54,840, as compared to Rs. 40,42,20,368 and Rs. 45,38,32,021 respectively for the corresponding period of 1880, and to Rs. 32,42,53,671 and Rs. 41,39,45,869 for the eight months, April to November, of 1879. The gross amount of import duty collected during the month of November last was Rs. 36,61,750, as compared to Rs. 37,79,761, and Rs. 37,07,123 in the corresponding month of 1880 and 1879 respectively; and of export duty Rs. 3,07,354, as compared to Rs. 3,15,564 and Rs. 1,96,809.

We call the attention of our readers to an advertisement in another column which announces the first of a course of lectures by Mr. Joseph Cook of Boston for Sunday evening, at half past eight o'clock, in the Framjee Cawasjee Institute. Mr. and Mrs. Cook arrived by the mail steamer of Thursday morning, and at the request of a committee of gentlemen in Bombay, Mr. Cook has agreed to deliver a short course of philosophical lectures similar to those which have already made his name well-known in educated circles both in England and America. H. E. Jacomb Esq., Collector of Bombay, has kindly consented to occupy the chair at the first lecture. No doubt a large number of people, both European and native, will avail themselves of this opportunity of listening to the distinguished lecturerer.

His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief is expected to arrive at the Boree Bunder station at 9-15 a.m. on Monday, the 9th instant. General Hardinge is pleased to dispense with the guard of honor. A salute of 15 guns will be fired from the saluting battery to announce his arrival.

A native gentleman of Ahmednagar telegraphs to us that "a grand entertainment consisting of fire-works, sweetmeats, and a theatrical performance by the Bombay Sangita Natakar, was given on Thursday night, at his residence, by Mr. Wedderburn, judge of Ahmednagar, to the respectable inhabitants of the city and district. Over two thousand people of all classes were present. The whole entertainment was a complete success. Hearty congratulations and pan-supari ended the treat."

Mr. John McLeod Campbell took charge of his office of Acting Collector of Customs, Bombay, on the 5th instant. Mr. Trevor, for whom Mr. Campbell has been appointed to act, left for Europe on the 1st instant, and Mr. H. L. Wright was placed in charge of the Custom House during the interval between Mr. Trevor's departure and Mr. Campbell's assumption of his new office.

A Fatal accident has occurred at a car festival. A telegram from Chidambaram, in the Madras Presidency, to the Madras Mail States :—The great car has capsized, and three lives have been lost by its fall.

Regarding the new telegraph tariff, the Pioneer remarks:—It seems that urgent and deferred messages will not be carried on the telegraph systems of the State and Guaranteed Railways, so, therefore, any telegram which cannot be conveyed to its destination entirely by the Government wires, must be classed 'ordinary.' We can understand that the necessity for giving priority to messages relating to the train service may constitute a difficulty as regards 'urgent' telegrams, but it is not easy to perceive any valid reason why 'deferred' messages should not be carried by the railway telegraph.

The Asian promises, with its next number, a large lithograph of one of the finest of our Asiatic Wild Sheep—The Ovis Poli—drawn on stone by Mr. Stentiale, with a series of horns of the various other species which will render the plate specially valuable to sportsmen and naturalists."

The R. H. A. troop, lately quartered at Peshawar, left that station on the morning of the 3rd inst. en route for Sialkot under command of Captain Campbell, Major Dixon not having recovered from his unfortunate shot wound sufficiently to march.

Captain H. W. Brent, R. N., a Post-captain of 1875, has been appointed Director of Indian Marine. The truth is, the Allahabad paper explains, that, though the Indian navy is not a powerful force, it is too large a fleet to take care of itself without a qualified man at the head of it. The temporary abolition of Admiral Bythesea's appointment was a blunder which it has now been found necessary to repair, as is confessed by the fact of Captain Brent's appointment. Nor will many note very little show anything about the facts be misled into supposing that the subversion of the old arrangements and the return to "as you were" has been due to any considerations requiring a change in the personnel of the Indian naval department. The Indian Government never had a better qualified nor more sensible and painstaking official in its service than Admiral Bythesea, who was rudely sacrificed to the feeling about the late regime in India with which the present Government at home came into power.

If rumour is to be credited, the Englishman says, the Government of India has at length decided to reorganize its several Secretariat establishments on a uniform scale of salaries. "In some departments the pay of the different grades has been more liberally fixed than in others, and though it is difficult to say what were the considerations that prevailed in making such differences, the fact that they have had a demoralizing tendency on the less favoured departments is manifest from the assimilation contemplated. Paying the head assistant of one department Rs. 600, and that of another Rs. 400, was justified only if the ability and work of the one were appraised at a higher value than the other, but experience has shown that there is no obvious difference in the class of men entertained for these appointments in Secretariat offices. The accident of being employed in a department, in which the same intelligence and capacity for work are required as in any other department, but which is worse off in respect of pay, cannot but be viewed as a misfortune. Either one department must be overpaid or the other not paid enough, and it is wise of the Government to remedy such an anomaly. The object should be to place the subordinates of all departments on an equal footing, so as to avoid jealousy. While on this subject we may remark that in the changes to be carried out it would, for economical reasons, not be inappropriate to consider the expediency of abolishing the Registrar's appointment in Secretariat offices. If we mistake not, when this office was originally created, its occupants had great responsibility as well as hard work, because, in addition to the supervision of the office establishments, they were required to take up the heavy intellectual work of the office. But in recent years, when the necessity for such has vanished, the appointment has degenerated into almost a sinecure. All the more important work in now performed by assistants in the department, and at no time, even during pressure, is the Registrar called upon to relieve the offices of work. To keep merely the accounts of the office, and to exercise a nominal control over its establishments, are duties for which a salary of Rs. 600 or Rs. 700 a month is surely a large."

Mr. Blake, m. p. for Waterford, one of several Members of Parliament who have taken advantage of the present cold season to see something of India for themselves, is now at Allahabad, where he appears to have been "interviewed" by a representative of the Indian Herald, judging from the following extract from that paper :—

It may be remembered that some time ago the papers announced that Mr. Blake, M. P. for Waterford, was about to visit India for the purpose of enquiring into the agricultural question. We understand that this was only one of the objects Mr. Blake had in view, and that he has, during the past two months, been busy in an examination of our administrative machinery. While in the Punjab he was anxious to see something of that scientific frontier of which so much has been said in recent years, and, accompanied by Mrs. Blake, he made his way as far as the Khyber. Owing to the kindness of Major Conolly, the Political Agent, he was able to advance some distance into the Pass, under the protection of an escort of Afridis. The party visited Fort Maud and other places of interest, and only turned back on reaching a point some little way from Ali Musjid. On his way down country, Mr. Blake spent some time in Oudh, and on Saturday last attended a meeting of the Talukdars' Association, presided over by the Maharajah of Bulrampore. At this meeting he presented a paper on the Preservation of Grasses and Cereals, which may be taken as an acknowledgment in full of the obligation under which he has laid himself in the course of his varied and extensive enquiries into Indian matters. The subject of preserving fodder is one of the greatest importance in this country, and Mr. Blake was able to bring to bear on its consideration the experience of Australia, the United States, and Canada. The method which he recommended for India was that in common use in America, and known as "Insolage." It is a plan by which the forage is stored in pits, and its chief feature is the lining of the pits with cement. When the pits are prepared and filled, the whole is covered over with dry fodder and stones, and it is said that in this manner forage can be kept in a perfectly fresh condition for many months. Mr. Blake subsequently visited the Model Farm at Cawnpore, and has expressed his opinion that the wheat of these Provinces is equal in quality to any he has seen in America. We understand that Mr. Blake intends to publish the results of his observations on his return to England, and a work from his pen ought to throw much light on the social and agricultural problems which he is well fitted to discuss."

Lieut. General the Hon. J. W. B. Macdonald, whose death is announced by Reuter, served the Eastern campaign of 1854 as Aide de Camp to the Duke of Cambridge, including the battles of Alma (horse shot), Balaklava, and Inkerman (horse shot), siege of Sebastopol, and sortie of 26th October (Brevet of Lt. Colonel, Medal with four Clasps, C.B., Knight of the Legion of Honor, 5th Class of the Medjidie, and Turkish Medal).

Lieut. General B. R. Powell served with the Reserve Force in Sind in 1839; served in the Deccan against the rebel Bheels in 1857; present at Shunsapoor; commanded the first line on defence in Nimar and Khandeish under General Sir Hugh Rose, against the attempted invasion of the Deccan by Tantia Topee; commanded the outposts on the Northern and Eastern Frontier of Khandeish and the Deccan from 17th June 1859 to 9th May 1860.

A "Girl Graduate" writes to a London paper: —The recent announcement that a lady student of Girton College was placed third in the second class in the Moral Science Tripos at Cambridge does not do full justice to the achievements of the ladies in this abstruse field of study. As a matter of fact two Newham students were, in the judgment of the examiners, worthy of a first class—a distinction gained on the present occasion by no male candidate. The explanation of the silence of the examiners on this point is, that these two ladies had not qualified themselves by passing all the previous public examinations of the University, and were, therefore, not entitled to the privilege conferred by the recent Grace of the Senate, which orders that all ladies so qualified shall be classed in a separate official list. Till now the examination of the ladies has been informal, and merely an act of courtesy on the part of the examiners. These two distinguished Moralists are the last whose light will thus be hid under a bushel.

Writing on the subject of the task the French have set themselves in Tunis, the Times, in a leading article, says :—Its gravity must be more and more felt. The army of occupation, it is plain, is not near the end of its difficulties. These are extending rather than decreasing. When not in arms the Arabs are discontented and restless. The feeling of hostility against the French is as strong as it was. Even in Sfax, which not long ago experienced a bombardment, and where a French garrison has been for five months, the hostility of the people remains as fierce as it was, and a French soldier cannot venture in safety beyond the walls. This is not an exceptional state of things. The French everywhere find themselves in presence of a spirit of opposition which may be foolish and fanatical, but which is likely to last for some time. The present force, large though it is, proves inadequate. The conquest of Tunis is seen to be almost as onerous a task as that of Algeria was to a former generation. No one, of course, doubts the capacity of France to succeed in the enterprise. It is all a question of time and money. But the prize seems to be scarcely worth the trouble, loss of lives, diversion of national energy and complications which it involves.

An estimate of the municipal estate of the city of Paris has been published, which, the Pall Mall thinks, it would be very interesting to contrast with a similar valuation in London. Omitting all national monuments and buildings, the Parisian municipality is possessed of property of one description and another of the value of £42,400,000. Sixty-four churches are estimated at nearly seven millions, twenty barracks at a million, and 140 primary schools at two and a half millions sterling. The city possesses 19 cemeteries, valued at about £1,300,000, 44 parks, squares, etc., at nearly eleven millions, and 96 statues, fountains, etc., valued at £140,000. How much, we wonder, would a competent valuer set down as a fair price for the statues and public monuments of London?

BENGAL.

Petition for a new Railway.—A memorial has been submitted to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, praying for the construction of a railway through the districts of Hooghly and Burdwan.

The Calcutta Race Meeting.—Our Calcutta Race Meeting for 1881 is now but a matter of Turf history to appear amongst the records in future Asian "Pocket Books." But we are glad to be able to record that it has been the most successful meeting held for many years. This has been due entirely to the efforts of the Stewards, who not only put forward a very attractive prospectus, but spared no trouble to make the course as good as possible, also to oblige owners and trainers.—Asian.

Departure of the Scotch Rifles from Calcutta.—The left wing of the 2nd Battalion Scotch Rifles, under command of Major Ward, commenced their march to Cawnpore of three o'clock this morning (Jan. 3), with the following officers :—Captains Heathcote and Vincent, Lieutenants Sheehan, Ross Anderson and Cookson. The strength of the wing was seven officers, 22 non-commissioned officers, 348 privates. The right wing and Headquarters under Colonel Rogers, V. C., will leave on Wednesday.—Indian Daily News.

Calcutta Regatta.—The annual Regatta, in connection with the Calcutta Rowing Club, was held at Barrackpore on Monday, a special train running for the convenience of visitors. The day was beautifully fine and not too hot; a nice breeze, which was blowing up the river at the time, considerably mitigated the ardour of the sun's rays. The race in which the most interest was taken, was for the Hooghly Challenge Cup; it was thought by many that Calcutta would win the day, but the fortune of war was against them, although the knowledge that the eyes of the fair sex were upon them, ought to have moved their arms with greater strength. However, nil desperandum should be their motto, and they should not dispair of winning it back again next year. From the start to the finish, the Columbus, did not pull quite so fast as their opponents, but yet the long, clean, powerful stroke, which deadly adds in their favour, and the time in easy winners. The Calcutta team pulled a hastier stroke, but neither so clean, nor so powerful as their opponents, and managed to spoon up a lot of water. The Columbo crew thoroughly deserved all their success, for the pluck and energy which made them come such a long distance to try conclusions with a crew whose capabilities was unknown to them, and on strange waters, and after having had the misfortune to lose Mr. Boustead, who is an old Oxford man, whose experience in the University boat races would have been of considerable service to them. For the Sculling Race Mr. Julius was a strong favourite, but here again was shown the extreme hazard of speculating on a race before it was pulled, as Mr. Garbett carried it off. This was a very good race, both men pulling very well all through. For the third race, the Open Fours, those who backed the brokers' crew to win, were for once right in their speculations. The civilians' crew gracefully drew out of the contest, and so the tug of war lay between the Merchants and the Brokers' crew. The Merchants made very little show matter, by which time the gardens were quite full with crowds of sight and pleasure-seekers of every shape, hue and creed, those about the grounds, especially Natives and Babus, presenting quite a picturesque appearance from their variety of costume, manner, and individual peculiarities. Gaily dressed groups of Marwaris in their bright coloured dresses, and, in many cases, ludicrous head-gear, while the refreshment tents were invariably full of thirsty souls whom charity had made extra generous, and by whom the stalls were mostly patronised. The different Charities in the city had stalls all over the ground on behalf of the Home and St. Vincent's Sisters of the Poor had each a stall gorgeous with all sorts of good things, to be had for a small consideration. The Roman Catholic Charitable Conferences attached to the three great parishes had their stalls, too, as also had the District Charitable Society, the Armenian Charitable Association and members of other charitable and religious bodies, each of whom claimed, and received therefore the support on behalf of the poor. The Viceroy's Band and the Band of the Native Infantry Regiment at Alipore played a selection of airs during the day and helped, in no small measure, to add to the general amusement. On the arrival of Their Excellencies Lord and Lady Ripon paid a visit to the grounds a little before dark, and were received at the entrance of the gardens by His Grace Dr. Goethals, the Roman Catholic Archbishop, and Mr. H. L. Harrison, the Chairman to the Town Commissioners, and were conducted over the grouds visiting the St. Vincent's, the Charitable Societies, and the Armenian stalls, examining the good things that were therein displayed, and not forgetting the object for which the stalls were kept. After this their Excellencies left the grounds, being cheered frequently, and it was not until a late hour that the last pleasure-seeker quitted the "Zoo."—Englishman.

1st Battalion Oxfordshire Regiment.—The Head-Quarters and Wing of the 1st Battalion Oxfordshire Regiment, which have been stationed at Thayetmyo and Tonghoo, consisting of 500 men of all ranks, were to reach Rangoon on the 5th instant, and embark at that port for Madras about the 9th instant, per s. s. Himalaya and Czarewitch, arriving about the 19th idem, when they will proceed to Bangalore by rail to be stationed there. The remainder of the Regiment will leave Thayetmyo and Tonghoo on being relieved by the Bedfordshire Regiment about the end of February, and thence embark for Madras, arriving on the 12th idem, when they will proceed to join their Regimental Headquarters.—Mail.

The Earthquake.—The late earthquake is reported by a correspondent as having been felt in Benares. Somebody's clock stopped: that appears to have been all the damage done and all the evidence for the earthquake, as far as we understand the account received.—Pioneer.

Ball at Lahore.—On Friday evening, December 30, the residents of Lahore gave a ball to the residents of Meean Meer and other guests. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (who was one of the subscribers) and a large party from Government House including Lord and Lady Lawrence who are staying there, attended.

Extension of Kohat Cantonment.—With a view to the defence of Kohat from thieves, and to improve the water supply, it is now in contemplation to extend the boundary of the cantonment so as to include the springs, and also the stream, along whose banks a number of mills are scattered. These mills, some 18 or 20 in number, have long been suspected of harbouring thieves, and it is very necessary that they should be under direct control. A plan for walling in the large villages adjoining the cantonment, instead of demolishing them, as formerly intended, will greatly diminish the cost of the proposed improvements. Gardens and orchards running into the heart of the cantonment will probably have to be purchased and cleared. The whole cost of the extension now proposed will be well within a lakh of rupees.—Civil and Military Gazette.

A Fakir.—In the form of an intellectual young lady, a T. G. may sometimes be more amusing, even to a personally unattractive Tookin. One such, craving experiences that should not be commonplace, was lately recommended to go and see an old Sikh fakir, who is always to be found at home on a few hillocks overlooking the cantonment at Allahabad, where he has sat "exposed to the wind and the hail and the rain" like Bombastes Furioso, with no canopy but the Heavens, for upwards of fifty years. He is really a wonderful human phenomenon, for the hot winds of May, and the scorching sun, and the torrents of the rainy season, and the bitter cold of January nights, have assailed his unprotected head for more than half a century, and have left him still living, still dreamily gazing into the future, and careless of all this world can do to comfort or to harm him. Looking now about eighty or ninety, or any age you like, and quite blind, he still keeps his long vigil and might give Tennyson a subject for an oriental version of St. Simeon Stylites. "Indeed I would not go," says the young lady from England to whom this is explained, "to encourage him in anything so horrid." To encourage him! It is to behold you picture of pleasing the Dean and Chapter by stroking the dome of St. Paul's.—Pioneer.

Lucknow Agricultural Exhibition.—The Exhibition now opened at Lucknow has a very wide scope, including agricultural produce and implements, arts and manufactures. Discussions have been held on the selection of seeds, the possibility of introducing ploughs of European pattern, the prosecution of arboriculture, and the extension of well irrigation. The last named subject is one which affect in a very intimate degree the prosperity of the cultivators. But in very many localities, where all irrigation would be most useful and practicable, the ryots are too poor to incur the expense of digging wells. A good deal on this subject has been written in the provincial Administration Reports, but provincial governments have not yet advanced beyond the stage of discussion. As for arboriculture, we should have thought that the experiments of the North-West Provinces Agricultural Department had already settled that subject by no means unsatisfactorily. The Lucknow Exhibition will close on Thursday next after having been open for about a week. The time seems by far too short. However, it is pleasant to know that the Oudh talukdars who have originated this Exhibition, are showing that they feel an intellegent interest in the condition of the province, so much of soil of which has been bestowed upon them, for no good service that they are known to have rendered to the State—Civil and Military Gazette.

HOME EDUCATION FOR INDIAN LADIES.

The following Paper was read by the late Director of Public Instruction, Madras, at a meeting of the National Indian Association, held on November 29, Colonel G. B. Malleson, C.S.I., in the chair :—

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen,—In a general way it is known, even to those who have not visited India, that superior and secondary instruction have made considerable strides of late years in that country, that some although much less progress has been made in the diffusion of primary and technical education, but that in the department of female education comparatively little has been effected, notwithstanding the encouragement which it has received, and the efforts which have been made. Persons who have always lived in Europe can, however, perhaps scarcely fully realize the great intellectual gulf which our system of education is creating in India between husbands and wives. We have grown accustomed here to the daily and hourly influence which refined and highly cultivated women exercise in their homes and in society. We see them continually competing successfully with men in various fields, and sometimes achieving the highest eminence in science, literature and art. We live in a generation which has produced such women as "George Eliot," Harriet Martineau and Mary Somerville. This Association, founded by a lady, is only one instance among a thousand of the kind of work which female philanthropy is doing around us. But in Eastern lands it is not so. In India law, tradition and custom have for ages been opposed to anything like a liberal system of female education. No doubt if we go back to the most remote ages, the Vedic period, we shall find that women enjoyed a high position, and were not kept in seclusion. Marriage was sacred, husband and wife were joint rulers of their households, and united in addressing prayers to the gods. Some of the most beautiful hymns are believed to have been composed by ladies. But even then it must be remembered that at this period the institution of caste in its later sense had not come into existence. Life was patriarchal. The nation was represented by a multitude of small communities, mainly engaged in tending their flocks and herds, and cultivating their fields, although constantly at war with one another, and with the people whose lands they were endeavouring to occupy.

The precise period at which the seclusion of women began in India cannot be ascertained, but there does not seem sufficient ground for the supposition that the custom dates from the priod of the Mahomedan conquests. We have very little information as to the state of education among Hindu women prior to the British period, and may therefore pass on to accounts given by men who lived in the latter part of the last and early part of the present century. The Abbé Dubois, after escaping from the massacres of the French Revolution, sought refuge in India, and laboured for more than thirty years as a missionary in the Mysore country. During the whole of this period he made it, by his own constant rule to live as the natives did, confirming exactly in all things to their manners, to their style of living and clothing, and even to most of their prejudices. He spared no pains to obtain authentic information regarding the institutions and manners of the Hindus by diligently studying some of the works in greatest estimation among them, and by maintaining a close and familiar intercourse with persons of every caste and condition of life, through the great number of districts which he traversed. The result of his researches during the first eighteen years of his residence in India he embodied in a manuscript work, which he put into the hands of Major Wilks, then Resident of Mysore, in 1806, who pronounced it the most correct, comprehensive and minute account extant in any European language of the customs and manners of the Hindus. A judgment in which Sir James Mackintosh concurred. The Abbé himself had no means of editing the work at his own charge, but the publication of it was considered so important from a political point of view that the Madras Government purchased the copyright for two th

CARLTON WHISKEY, ELEVEN YEARS OLD.

Same as supplied to the Carlton and other London Club Houses.

THESE GRAND OLD WHISKIES are shipped only by RICHARD MATHEWS AND COMPANY, of London and Inverness, who are sole possessors of the Brand "CARLTON." They are distilled from the finest Highland Malt only, are in every respect equal to the finest Brandy, and guaranteed to be entirely free from Fusel Oil or other noxious impurities.

The following Testimonial has been received from the Secretary of the "CARLTON" CLUB.

CARLTON CLUB, 1875,
December 20.

MESSRS. R. MATHEWS & COMPY.

GENTLEMEN,—In reply to your inquiry as to whether the Whiskey you are supplying to this Club is approved by the Members, the best answer I can give is that the consumption of this spirit in the Club has GREATLY INCREASED since it has been supplied by your Firm. There can be no doubt whatever about the Whiskey being MOST EXCELLENT.

It is old and soft, and I may safely say that it is much approved by the Members.

CAUTION.—It has come to the knowledge of the shippers of the "CARLTON" WHISKIES that the empty bottles have been dishonestly refilled with the poisonous trash very often sold in India under the name of Whiskey, this is therefore to caution consumers to carefully examine the Capsules and Corks to see they have not been tampered with; also that the Corks, Capsules, and Labels are branded with Trade Mark.
